

EXPLORING THE TOPIC

PHILOSOPHY

SCHOOL

Philosophy should be compulsory at secondary school because it helps students think more clearly.

It teaches them how to ask good questions and understand other people's opinions.

Also, it helps young people make better decisions in life. Thinking deeply is important, not only for exams but also for real life.

Philosophy should not be compulsory because not all students enjoy thinking about abstract ideas.

Some students find it boring or difficult. Also, there are already many important subjects at school, like maths and science.

We don't need to add more pressure with extra subjects.

PROBLEMS and SOLUTIONS

1- Unemployment is a big problem in many countries. Many people cannot find a job, even if they have good qualifications. Without work, people can feel stressed and lose hope. It also affects the economy and families.

2- Pollution is damaging the planet. Cars, factories, and plastic waste make the air, water, and land dirty. It causes health problems and harms animals and nature. The situation is getting worse every year.

1- To reduce unemployment, governments can invest in job training programs. People can learn new skills and find work more easily. Also, supporting small businesses can create more jobs in the community.

2- We can fight pollution by using public transport and recycling more. Factories should follow rules to produce less waste. Governments and people must work together to protect the environment.

PROBLEMS and SOLUTIONS

3- Many people live on the streets without a home. Some lost their jobs, others have mental health problems. Homelessness is dangerous and difficult. It also shows that society is not helping its most vulnerable people.

4- Bullying is a serious issue in many schools. Some students feel scared or alone because others are mean to them. It can affect mental health and make it hard to learn or enjoy school.

3- To help the homeless, cities can build more shelters and offer support services. Mental health care and job training can give people a second chance. Everyone deserves a safe place to live.

4- Schools can stop bullying by teaching kindness and respect. Teachers must act quickly when bullying happens. Also, students should feel safe to talk and ask for help when they have problems.
